

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a process for producing components, in particular small glass plates such as windows for optical caps for optical components. The process includes providing a substrate, providing a carrier, joining a first surface of the substrate to a first surface of the carrier, machining the components out of the substrate, and detaching the components from the carrier in order to separate the components.